Tip of the Week: Self-testing— A Purdue University researcher found that short study sessions followed by practice testing helps students' performance on test day. Choose a class for which you have a test or quiz and write out five questions likely to be on the test. Next, test yourself in three ways: first, talk through the possible answers out loud (before looking them up in your textbook/notes); second, look up the answers to see where you can correct or perfect your answers, writing out notes or flashcards where necessary; third, after going over your notes for 5-10 minutes, set a timer (give yourself more or less time depending on if you have short answer, short essay, or problem-solving questions), and, without consulting your textbook or notes, write out your answers by hand. Repeat all of these steps to help you commit your answers to memory. Practice alone and test your team members as well. Attach a copy of your questions and answers to this sheet.
