Publications:

A) Books:

Human Thought, volume 70 in The Philosophical Studies Series (Dordrecht: Kluwer, 1997).

This book develops a chastened empiricist account of the possible contents of human thoughts, and explores the conditions required for the truth and existence of such thoughts

Goodness and Justice: A Consequentialist Moral Theory (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2006).

This book presents a three-part moral theory. It develops a new form of consequentialism involving group acts, called “multiple-act consequentialism”. It defends classical hedonism, but argues that the overall value of outcomes is distribution-sensitive.

Anti-Externalism (Oxford: Oxford University Press, forthcoming).

This book argues that externalism in the philosophy of mind is false. It critically examines arguments for externalism resting on intuitive examples, externalist accounts of perceptual content, and externalist theories that involve the mediation of thought by language. And it develops a plausible internalist but physicalist alternative.

Liberty and Justice is my current project.

It develops a desire-based account of the good which is an alternative to the hedonism of Goodness and Justice. And it applies multiple-act consequentialism and the proper understanding of the distributional-sensitivity of valuable outcomes to issues in social and political philosophy.
