Because of the long lead time, the descriptions should be considered to be rather tentative. Although it is assumed that most instructors will be offering the courses as described here, students should be aware that some changes are possible.

HOW TO USE THIS BOOKLET

This booklet should be used with the Schedule of Classes issued by the Office of Registration and Records. The English Department Course Description Booklet contains as many descriptions of courses as were available as of March 25, 2019. The Booklet may include descriptions of some courses that are not found in the official Schedule of Classes. If the course is described in this Booklet, but not in the Schedule of Classes, it should be assumed that the course will be offered as described in this Booklet. In every case the student should remember that in the interval between now and the start of the next semester, changes are inevitable, even though every effort is made to describe accurately in this Booklet what the Department intends to offer.

LEVEL OF COURSES

Students should not take more than six hours at the 100 level. These courses are intended for beginning students; upper-class students should take courses on the 200, 300, and 400 level. Course numbers with a middle digit of 5 mark writing courses, which are required in some colleges. Consult your college bulletin.

INDEPENDENT STUDY

Independent Study is intended for students who want to undertake readings or similar projects not available through regular course offerings. Students may do up to six credit hours of Independent Study with a member of the professorial staff. Before registering for Independent Study, students must complete an Independent Study Contract form, available from the English Advising Office, 201 Andrews, which describes the reading list, written work, times of meeting and the basis of the grade. The Contract Form must be signed by both the student and the supervising professor and a copy submitted to the English Advisor for department records. The student may then obtain the class number for the appropriate Independent Study course -- 199, 299, 399, 399H, or 497. The registration of any student who has not filed the contract with the English Advisor by the end of Drop/Add period will be canceled.

ENGLISH MAJORS

All Arts & Sciences College English majors (including double majors) should see their advisors every semester. For further information, see the English Advisor, in Andrews 201.

STUDENT APPEALS COMMITTEE

Students wishing to appeal a grade may address their grievances to the Department of English Appeals Committee. Under ordinary circumstances, students should discuss problems with their teachers before approaching the Committee. Inquire in the English department main office, Andrews 202, for the name and office of the Appeals Committee chair.

Students may inform the Chair of the Department, Andrews 204A, of cases where the content of courses materially differs from the description printed in the Course Description Booklet. Questions or complaints concerning teachers or courses should also be addressed to the Chair of the Department.

The University of Nebraska-Lincoln is a public university committed to providing a quality education to a diverse student body. It is the policy of the University of Nebraska-Lincoln not to discriminate based on gender, age, disability, race, color, religion, marital status, veteran's status, national or ethnic origin, or sexual orientation. This policy is applicable to all University administered programs including educational programs, financial aid, admission policies and employment policies.

Complaints, comments, or suggestions about these policies should be addressed to the Chair of the Department.
GUIDE TO THE ENGLISH DEPARTMENT'S CURRICULUM

The English Department offers a great many courses, more than are listed by title in the University Bulletin. These include courses in British and American literature, women's literature, other literatures in English, some literatures in translation, minority literatures, composition, creative writing, linguistics, film, popular literature, and English as a Second Language.

Knowing something about the organization of the curriculum may help majors or non-majors who are trying to find courses. The numbering system provides some guidance, first by levels:

Courses numbered from 100 to 151 are first-year composition courses.

English 180 and 200-level courses are considered entry-level courses, for majors and non-majors alike.

300-level courses are historical surveys of literature, advanced author courses, or advanced writing or rhetoric or linguistics courses.

4/800-level courses are combined senior/graduate classes and are more professional in their approach.

The numbering system provides additional guidance to types of courses. For example, middle-digit 5 courses, like 150, 252, 354, are all writing courses, including creative writing. Here is a quick guide to the numbering system:

A middle digit of "0" indicates courses in types of literature, such as short story (303), poetry (202), drama (4/801), or fiction (205).

A middle digit of "1" indicates special thematic courses or courses examining literature in relation to particular issues (several women's literature courses, Plains Literature, Illness and Health in Literature, for example).

A middle digit of "2" indicates language and linguistics courses.

A middle digit of "3" indicates courses focusing on authors (Shakespeare, The Brontës, Major American Authors).

A middle digit of "4" indicates ethnic minority courses, courses in translation, and courses that represent literature written in English in countries other than the United States and Britain (Judeo-Christian Literature, Canadian Literature, African-American Literature, for example).

A middle digit of "5" indicates creative writing or composition courses.

A middle digit of "6" indicates a historical survey of literature.

A middle digit of "7" indicates courses in criticism, theory, rhetoric (Literary/Critical Theory, Film Theory and Criticism).

A middle digit of "8" indicates interdisciplinary courses (Contemporary Culture).

A middle digit of "9" indicates special and professional courses.

Note: Film courses are spread throughout the numbering system, by analogy with literature courses. Thus Writing for Film and TV is numbered 259; Film Directors, 239; and so on.

The practical lesson from this numbering system is that if you find one course that interests you, you may be able to find others by looking for similar numbers at different levels. As may be clear from these examples, there is a lot of repetition in the English Department curriculum. (Anyone interested in a list of English courses by categories can obtain one from the English Advisor in 201 Andrews Hall.)

FIRST-YEAR ENGLISH

NOTE: 100-level English courses will be open only to freshman and sophomore students. Students in Arts and Sciences who have not completed the Communication requirement and have 65 credit hours or more should choose English 254 or 354 (or both) to complete this requirement. (In unusual cases, exceptions to this rule may be granted by the English Advisor, English Department.) Advanced students in other colleges who want or need a composition course should also choose 254 or 354.

English 101, including ethnic and honors variations, English 150, and English 151 are first-year English composition courses, designed to help students improve their writing by study and practice. Since reading and writing are closely related, several of the courses involve reading, and students can expect to do a substantial amount of writing — some formal, some informal, some done in class and some at home. Ordinarily students take 100-level courses in the first year.

Students registered in the College of Arts & Sciences are required to take any two of the following courses. Students in other colleges should check their college's bulletin or with an advisor, since different colleges have different requirements.

NOTE: English 150 and 151, including honors variations are self-contained courses. They are not designed to be taken in any particular sequence.

ENGLISH 150 — WRITING AND INQUIRY

This is a first-year English composition course that engages students in using writing and rhetorical concepts such as purpose, audience, and context to explore open questions — to pose and investigate problems that are meaningful in their lives and communities. Students can expect to produce the equivalent of 25 double-spaced pages of polished prose (a minimum of three writing projects) during the semester. This course is recommended for students who wish to improve their writing, reading and inquiry skills (such as learning to identify relevant and productive questions, learning to synthesize multiple perspectives on a topic, etc.)

English 150H — Honors Writing: Writing and Inquiry

This course is intended for students who have had significant prior experience and success with English classes and/or contexts that require writing, revision and analysis. Admission is by invitation or application only. Contact the Department of English Advisor for more information. This course shares the same focus and goals as English 150 and requires an equivalent amount of reading and writing.

English 151 — Writing and Argument

This is a first-year English composition course that engages students in the study of written argument: developing an informed and committed stance on a topic, and using writing to share this stance with particular audiences for particular purposes. Students can expect to produce the equivalent of 25 double-spaced pages of polished prose (a minimum of three writing projects) during the semester. This course is recommended for students who wish to improve their writing and reading skills through the study and practice of argument.
English 151H — Honors Writing: Writing and Argument

This course is intended for students who have had significant prior experience and success with English classes and/or contexts that require writing, revision and analysis. Admission is by invitation or application only. Contact the Department of English Advisor for more information. This course shares the same focus and goals as English 151 and requires an equivalent amount of reading and writing.

English 151-900 — ONLINE- Writing and Argument

This is a first-year English composition course that engages students in the study of written argument: developing an informed and committed stance on a topic, and using writing to share this stance with particular audiences for particular purposes. Students can expect to produce the equivalent of 25 double-spaced pages of polished prose (a minimum of three writing projects) during the semester. This course is recommended for students who wish to improve their writing and reading skills through the study and practice of argument.

English 180 — Introduction to Literature

NOTE: This course does not fulfill any part of the freshman composition requirement in the College of Arts and Sciences.

This course is intended to introduce first and second-year students to examination of reading, especially the reading of literature. In order to examine the process of reading, students can expect to explore literary works (poems, stories, essays, and drama), some works not usually considered literary, and the students' own reading practices. The course will deal with such questions as how do we read, why do we read, and what is literature and what are its functions.

English 140 — Advanced Academic Writing & Usage (3 credits)

English 141 — Advanced Academic Reading (3 credits)

English 142 — Advanced Academic Listening & Speaking Skills (3 credits)

English 143 - Seminar in Credit English for Academic Purposes (1 credit)

English 186 — English as a Second Language/Language Skills (3 credits)

English 187 — English as a Second Language/Introduction to Writing (3 credits)

English 188 — English as a Second Language/Advanced Communication Skills (3 credits)

NOTE: Admission to these courses is by placement examination required of all newly admitted non-native speakers. See the Coordinator of ESL Program, Chris Dunsmore, Nebraska Hall Rm. 513E, for more information.
English 188 applies to the composition requirement in Arts and Sciences, and in some other colleges.

Admission is by invitation or application only. Contact the Department of English Advisor for more information. This course shares the same focus and goals as English 151 and requires an equivalent amount of reading and writing.

English 170 is an introductory creative writing course in the major genres of creative writing: poetry, fiction, and creative nonfiction. Students enrolled in this course will be expected to produce creative works in all of these genres and can expect to develop and practice the fundamental skills of these genres, including techniques in poetics, characterization, theme, structure, and narrative development. Through the reading of their own work and others, students will also develop the ability to respond to poetry, fiction, and essays analytically and imaginatively, both orally and in writing, in order to understand the context and significance of creative writing in today’s world.

AIM:
A broad historical survey of Western literature from the eighteenth century to the present. We will consider a wide range of literary genres (including poems, plays, novels, essays, and oral literature), all the while attempting to understand how literary art both reflects and questions the culture in which it is created and understood.

Particular attention will be paid (in the latter half of the course) to post-colonial literature, to the rising voices of women and minorities in Europe and U.S., and to writers throughout the "global south."

TEACHING METHOD:
Lecture/discussion.

REQUIREMENTS:
A series of graded writing assignments, a midterm, and a final exam.

READINGS:
Authors may include such writers as Kant, Rousseau, Voltaire, Behn, Swift, Sor Juana, Goethe, Sarmiento, Douglas, Blake, Heine, Dickinson, Whitman, De Castro, Mallarme, Dostoevsky, Rimbaud, Woolf, Mann, Lorca, Camus, Solzhenitsyn, Achebe, Heaney, Soyinka, Morrison, Diaz, and Coetzee.

Muchiri, N – 050

In this course we’ll be particularly interested in pursuing a critique of the production of images that are easily recognizable as “African” – war, poverty, famine, etc. Why is Africa repeatedly approached as the “always already” known, understood, or assumed? What does it mean to “know” Africa? Do Africans have the ultimate claim to “knowing” the continent? When is it appropriate for outsiders to step in? How can we distinguish processes of seeking knowledge that empower, from those that disenfranchise? Finally, we will also deeply examine newer, more empowering, ways of understanding the African continent. #Wakandaforever

Serial Killer Nation: Sex, Violence, and Trauma in Popular Culture

Serial killers, both real and fictional, lurk in the recesses of cultural imaginings emerging in an instant as the representation of what is most monstrous in our natures. This course will consider the serial killer phenomenon. We will examine the fictional role of serial killers in some of the post popular television series of the new millennium. Indeed, considering the success of shows like CSI, Criminal Minds, and Law & Order: SVU, one might wonder if it is possible to entertain American audiences without the rape and torture of what turns out to be mostly women and children. This course will consider the rise of the serial killer anti-hero such as Hannibal Lecter, whose presence in film and on television now spans more than three decades. We will also examine real world serial killers—disconcerting figures such as Dean Corll, John Wayne Gacy, and Jeffrey Dahmer. As we consider what constitutes these individuals, we will respectfully consider their victims and the distortion of the social fabric that often masks their activities by looking at individuals in their immediate vicinities as well as the society at large. Students will have the opportunity to consider the serial killer phenomenon in fiction, on film and TV, through historic documents and evidence, through scholarly studies, and by reviewing first-hand accounts.

English 200 is a uniquely self-aware class. In it we pay sustained attention to the field of English: what it is, what it does, and why it matters. To that end we’ll explore literary and genre fiction, poetry, creative nonfiction, critical theory, digital humanities, and publishing. We’ll read essays, poetry, and fiction—often several contemporary novels. The Age of Miracles, On Such a Full Sea, and Never Let Me Go are favorites. Favored authors include: Sandra Cisneros, Octavia Butler, and Ursula Le Guin. Writing assignments afford practice with analysis, research, and creative writing, and the major research project gives students the latitude to explore nearly any kind of writing they find attractive. English 200 is an exciting class meant to illuminate what it means to study and work in the field of English.

AIM:

An introduction to dramatic art that surveys nearly twenty-five-hundred years of literature and performance. We will explore various aspects of theatrical art -- including the history of set design, acting, and the role of the playwright -- with particular emphasis on the ways in which drama influences and is influenced by the cultures in which it appears.

TEACHING METHOD:

Lecture/discussion.

REQUIREMENTS:

Students will be expected to participate regularly in class discussions and to produce short critical essays. This class also has a midterm and a final.

TENTATIVE READING LIST:

Readings may include plays by Sophocles, Euripides, Marlowe, Shakespeare, Ibsen, Strindberg, Hughes, Brecht, Genet, O'Neill, Pinter, Fornés, Hwang, Kushner, and Albee.

Obioma, C - 001
English 205, as the course title suggests, concerns a series of novels written by writers of the 20th century. Despite its suggested broad scope, the course is not intended as an exhaustive survey, but as an opportunity for us to concentrate on a select group of texts and explore how these novelists use various literary conventions to help evoke the economic, psychological, and social forces that shape the lives of the characters they depict. We will attend closely to character, narrative technique, and theme in the process. As we do so, we will consider how these works represent, understand, interrogate, and share human experience. We will also consider how a literary work may be viewed as a record of lived experience that speaks to contemporaneous issues, or that excavates and accesses history. Class sessions will vary in format, featuring lecture, discussion, and group work. Course work will include short papers, presentations, and exams.

Also, by passing this course, you will fulfill ACE Learning Outcome 5: “Use knowledge, historical perspectives, analysis, interpretation, critical evaluation, and the standards of evidence appropriate to the humanities to address problems and issues.” At the end of the term, you may be asked to provide samples of your work for ACE assessment as well.

There’s little doubt that we live in what Isaac Asimov once called a “science fictional world.” Technology plays an exponentially increasing part in our day to day lives across the globe. Developments in the sciences, especially in astronomy, medicine, agriculture, energy, and environmental sciences, are changing our understanding of the universe, the human body, society, and the planetary ecology itself. And we are witnessing the consequences of these developments by, for instance, the threat of global climate change. Now, more than ever, to ask questions about the future and the social consequences of technological change is vitally important.

Since the middle of the nineteenth century, fiction writers have been speculating about what a technological Future might be like and what the consequences of technological change are upon individuals, societies, species, and planets. We call this branch of literature Science Fiction. In many respects, we currently live in a Future (or a version of it) that many of these science fiction writers imagined.

In this course, we will explore the genre of science fiction thematically and historically, and consider what science fiction has to offer us today. We will learn about the genre by reading a number of significant science fiction short stories and a few novels, and through lectures, discussions, and occasional visual media.

TENTATIVE READING LIST: Sense of Wonder: A Century of Science Fiction, ed. Leigh Grossman; The Space Merchants, Frederik Pohl & C.M. Kornbluth; Ready Player One, Ernest Cline.

Exploring plague narratives from the Black Death to the zombie apocalypse, this class will examine how plague has and continues to shape social and cultural formations. As a class, we will revisit the civilization-altering event of the Black Death; we will re-examine the legacy of HIV, and we will re-consider how the speculative fiction of zombie narratives influence our worldview. The works selected for this course will include fiction, nonfiction, science fiction, memoir, drama, historic documents, and epidemiological studies. We will read work by a wide-range of authors including Susan Sontag, Tony Kushner, Elizabeth Pisani, Daryl Gregory, and Michel Foucault. The threat of plague haunts the edges of our social order. Come join the conversation about how and why this happens in English 210-I.

AIM: This course in lesbian and gay literature examines American authors, poets, artists, and filmmakers who have created characters and story from imagined or specific historical moments in order to convey a larger, universal truth regarding the human experience. We will look at each work of art in terms of craft and also in terms of its historical and cultural import. How do these authors and artists consider identity, sexual orientation (growing up gay, lesbian, bisexual, transgender, etc.) in their works? We will pay attention to the diversity of U.S. lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender literature in regards to race, class, and disability. Current articles regarding LGBT issues (gay marriage, domestic partnership, etc.) will be discussed in light of the works we are reading. You may also have an opportunity to meet a few of the authors we read in the course! We will explore how many of these authors, artists, and filmmakers have influenced mainstream culture, and we will also examine how mainstream culture has appropriated LGBT aesthetics and sensibilities. I look forward to being with you in this literary and artistic journey.

TEACHING METHOD: Your active participation is expected! Be ready to engage in discussions, group work, in-class writing, reading aloud, presentations, and other activities.

REQUIREMENTS: Journal writings; quizzes; attending and reporting on out-of-class events such as author’s readings; service-learning, action or research project.

TENTATIVE READING LIST: Oscar Wilde, The Picture of Dorian Gray; Mel White, Stranger at the Gate; Tim Schaffert, Devils in the Sugar Shop; Allison Bechdel, Fun Home; Julie Ann Peters, Luna; Elana Dykewomon, Beyond the Pale; James Baldwin, Giovanni’s Room; Chrystos, Fugitive Colors; Cherrie Moraga, (selections); Sinister Wisdom, The Latina Lesbian issue; Tony Kushner, Angels in America; Moisés Kaufman, The Laramie Project; Dorothy Allison, Two or Three Things I Know; Tom Spanbauer, The Man Who Fell in Love with

Course Description: This course offers an introductory survey of transcontinental Anglophone literature by and/or about women to introduce you to issues in proto-feminist and feminist thought in the Western literary tradition. Be assured that the course title indicates the focus of our investigation, not the required gender of the student. In this course, we will survey works of various periods and genres, including dramas, novels, short stories, poems, and essays, which focus on female experience. We will critically examine the pervasive images of women across a wide variety of literary texts and analyze the language through which women’s lives are depicted. Students will read and respond to these texts in several ways: (1) as artistic products in themselves (new criticism), (2) as products of particular artists (biographical criticism), and (3) as cultural productions reflective of historical, social, and philosophical issues and biases.

Proposed Texts: In addition to a number of additional shorter readings that will be provided to you electronically, I will be choosing some of the following major texts. This list will be narrowed further. Please check the syllabus posted on Blackboard before you order your books. George Eliot’s The Mill on the Floss (1860), Kate Chopin’s The Awakening (1899), Virginia Woolf’s To the Lighthouse (1927) & A Room of One’s Own (1929), Margaret Laurence’s The Stone Angel (1964), Sylvia Plath’s Ariel (small book of poetry) (1965), Toni Morrison’s The Bluest Eye (1970), Joy Castro’s Hell or High Water (2012).

This course meets ACE Learning Outcomes 5 & 9. (However, no single course can satisfy more than one ACE outcome in a student’s program of study). ACE Learning Outcome 5 requires that students: “Use knowledge, historical perspectives, analysis, interpretation, critical evaluation, and the standards of evidence appropriate to the humanities to address problems and issues.” ACE Learning Outcome 9 requires that students: “Exhibit global awareness or knowledge of human diversity through analysis of an issue.” Your work toward either of these outcomes will be evaluated by the instructor according to the specifications described in this syllabus. At the end of the term, you may be asked to provide samples of your work for ACE assessment as well.

English 216 will explore children’s literature from the early days of fairy tales and primers, to the Golden Age of nonsense poetry and fantastical fiction, to the modern era of realism—and everything in between. As a survey, this class will pay particular attention to the role of historical context in both children’s literature and the conception of childhood itself. What did it mean to be a child in 1850? 1950? And what did it mean to write for children of those eras? We’ll concern ourselves with the ways child labor, philosophies of education, religion, literacy, the rise of the middle class, and numerous social issues helped shape children’s literature. Most of all, we’ll read highly imaginative writing that engages, provokes, and transports!

White, L - 002

Aim: This course will explore the genre of children's literature, its origins and its development through the early twentieth century. Children’s literature is a genre which mostly came into being in the nineteenth century; we will focus on this literature's mirroring of such transatlantic cultural concerns as the nature of childhood, the threats of modernity, gender's obligations, imperialism and "other worlds," and religion. Texts will be mostly British, but we will also read some foundational European texts (e.g., by Hoffmann, the Brothers Grimm, and Hans Christian Anderson) and some key American children's literature (i.e., Tom Sawyer, Little Women, Uncle Remus).

Teaching Method: Lecture.

Requirements: Short papers, quizzes, midterm, and final examination.

Aim

To introduce students to the literary genres and traditions of Britain in the Medieval, Renaissance and Enlightenment periods. Starting with the Anglo-Saxon period, covering England’s many invasions and revolutions, and concluding with England’s role as an imperial power with global reach, this course will read many of the most well-known pieces of English literature with an eye towards shifting ideas of what “England” means to these authors, and how they define their communities through the inclusion and exclusion of various groups and cultural traditions.

Teaching Method

A mix of lecture and informal discussion.

Requirements

Midterm and final exams with essays, one presentation, a series of shorter informal writing assignments.
Tentative Reading List

Beowulf, “The Wanderer,” Lais by Marie de France, Sir Gawain and the Green Knight and several other Arthurian texts, Julian of Norwich and Margery Kempe, selections from Chaucer’s Canterbury Tales, sonnets & other Renaissance lyric poetry by Shakespeare, Donne, Sidney, Wroth, Jonson, Herbert, Marlowe’s Doctor Faustus, Milton’s Paradise Lost, Swift’s “A modest proposal,” and Behn’s Oroonoko. Please note: this is not a complete list, and many of the above works will not be read in full.

Aim: To introduce students to Shakespeare’s poetry and plays, along with different ways of approaching and appreciating them. The Sonnets will serve as a starting point in understanding Shakespeare’s poetic craft, sense of dramatic character, and psychological insight. We will then explore selected plays as dramatic scripts and historical documents, as well as literary texts. Since these are dramatic scripts, we will thoroughly analyze short scenes the better to understand how Shakespeare draws upon actor and audience alike. We will also examine how different ages have staged or adapted Shakespeare to reflect prevailing notions of drama and entertainment. To understand them as historical documents, we will learn about social and political concerns in Shakespeare’s day and his sense of history; we will also see how these plays have served to illuminate subsequent ages (including our own) and their concerns. Thinking about the plays as literary texts, we will look at how Shakespeare both utilizes and challenges conventional ideas about genre.

Teaching Method: Lecture; in-class readings and performances; film excerpts and analysis.

Requirements: Response cards; two formal papers; midterm and final examinations.

Tentative Reading List: Antony and Cleopatra; Henry IV, Part One; Henry V; Macbeth; Much Ado About Nothing; Sonnets; Twelfth Night

This course will examine a wide range of representative major authors in British literature from the Romantics who meditated on a post-revolutionary world to the high modernists of the early twentieth century, focusing on the powerful aesthetic responses of these authors to the dizzyingly rapid social changes in the Regency, Victorian, and modern worlds. Our presiding theme will be the Romantic and post-Romantic dilemma of recognizing, mourning, and accepting the loss of old certainties while celebrating the joys of, in Ezra Pound’s words, “making it new.” Representative works will come from a wide range of genres, including the novel, the short story, poetry (both lyric and narrative), drama, and the essay. Our aim will be both inward and outward; that is, we will practice close reading of the works in question while also placing them in the perspective of their intellectual, literary, and cultural history.

In this introductory literature course, we will contextualize the literary time periods within the socio-cultural historical time frames that allowed for particular artistic expression. We begin with the role segregation and race play/ed in the shaping of African-American literature, culture, and identity. The imagination is significant here because much of what we know about race is imaginary (i.e., in this course we proceed from the premise that racial categories are fictitious, or that racial hierarchies are not valid, or both).

This course will introduce you to the richness of Africa’s literary landscape. As may well be imagined, 15 weeks is an impossibly short amount of time for us to cover the artistic production of over 1 billion people, 54 nation-states, and several thousand languages. It is hoped that this course will inspire students to pursue a more in-depth study of African literature. We will read representative literary works by African writers, mainly in the English language, but with a sampling of works translated from other languages. These texts will be presented in their social, historical and cultural contexts.

In Unit 1, we'll examine the literary production of Africa's antiquity. This is an important re-battle to the common misconception that "African Literature" began with texts written in English, French, Portuguese, or other European languages. Unit 2 examines the culture of resistance that is deeply entrenched in African art - visual or literary. Africans have mobilized against various forms of oppression: slavery, colonialism, sexism, economic dependence, etc. Finally, Unit 3 will explore the ways in which historical forms of resistance have evolved in the 21st century. This activism involves such campaigns as regime change in Egypt, feminism and/or womanism, and actions against sexual violence. By the end of this course, students will have a deep appreciation of African literature's function--not only to entertain, but also to empower.

This course satisfies Student Learning Objective #7: Use knowledge, theories or methods appropriate to the arts to understand their context and significance.

This is an introductory course in fiction writing, designed to give you a basic mastery and understanding of various fictional techniques. You'll learn how to put together a scene, how to create interesting and believable characters, how to write effective dialogue, how to build suspense, how to use setting to heighten atmosphere and mood. You'll learn how to structure a story, and how to avoid plot clichés. You'll learn how to revise. You'll learn how to highlight your strengths and work on your weaknesses. Along the way, you'll also practice the more general craft of prose-writing, because many of the technical aspects of fiction-writing (sentence construction, punctuation, and word usage, for example) apply to all the prose-writing you'll do in your life at this university and in your life after college as well.

Though some of you may want to become professional writers, I know that's not the goal for everyone here. Whatever your level of talent, expertise, background, whatever your future ambitions, you can gain from this course. Even if you never write another story in your life after this semester, if you do the work of the course you'll come away with a better understanding of and more respect for good fiction, because you'll understand the process from the inside out; you'll have lived for a while as a writer.

Brunton, J - 002

Poetry is art. This course will introduce students to: 1) the art of making poems and 2) the theories that have shaped how we make, and talk about, poetry. Students will produce poems, critique each other’s work, and practice a variety of techniques for experimenting with words. We will think about poetry as words to be spoken and heard; as visual objects to be seen and touched; as sounds to be made and felt; as intersubjective experience to be shared; as pedagogy; as politics; as play; and as performance. We will ask and seek answers to questions such as what gets to count as a “poem”? what can a poem do? what should a poem do? why make poems? and weigh our own answers against those given by theorists and critics of poetry, literature, and aesthetics. Instruction will consist of a mix of in-class poetry-making studio sessions, reading/performing poems, critique of student work, and discussion of assigned theoretical and creative readings and audiovisual material. The assigned reading, listening, and viewing will include “traditional” poetry as well as work that pushes the boundaries of common definitions of “the poem” and work that incorporates other art forms (such as music, visual art, and performance). We will foreground work by people of color, women, and LGBTQ+ individuals.

By passing this course, you will fulfill ACE Learning Outcome 1: “Write texts, in various forms, with an identified purpose, that respond to particular audience needs, incorporate research or existing knowledge, and use applicable documentation and appropriate conventions of formal and structure.”

In this class, we will spend the majority of our time looking at the ways in which individuals use the written and spoken word to take up issues important to them and to engage in meaningful community conversations. Drawing on our experience as members of and contributors to multiple community conversations, we will explore what motivates us to speak and write about issues important to us.

Throughout the class, as you study and write about issues important to you, you’ll develop three writing projects through which you will 1) research and analyze how writing is used in a particular community in order to participate in community conversations; 2) represent a conflict and compose an argument around an issue of importance to community members; 3) advocate for issues important to you and other stakeholders in a particular community conversation.

Rutledge, G - 001

Aim: English Literature 261B, American Literature Since 1865, an introductory class that will give us a large perspective on critical developments in American literature through a few—far too few, I’m afraid—representative texts. We could and probably should read more, but a significant part of this class is learning how to engage in close reading, the meticulous, studied, and insatiably active reading of a text that unlocks meanings.
beyond what the casual read(er) would provide. This is not an easy skill, for it requires outside/previous knowledge, critical reading skills, and, finally, the very difficult and challenging writing and editing skills needed to convey the insights you gain from such to your audience. Still, our goal is to enjoy the texts and our discussions of them; hence the smaller number of readings. We will also discuss some of the literary periods and the historical developments behind them.

A significant part of the analytical endeavor outlined above is, ironically, related to unlocking your creative voice within the frame of authorial intent and socio-political context. Hence, over the course of the semester you will have several informal and formal assignments. The formal assignments are close reading papers and, perhaps, a midterm exam.

By passing this course, you will fulfill ACE Learning Outcome 5 (“Use knowledge, historical perspectives, analysis, interpretation, critical evaluation, and the standards of evidence appropriate to the humanities to address problems and issues.”).

Teaching Method: A combination of introductory lectures and, significantly, discussion.

Requirements (Tentative): Active reading and rigorous class participation. The final grade will depend upon 2-3 close-reading papers (2-3 pages each), exam (midterm or final), and class participation (includes absences, pop quizzes).

Tentative Reading List: Select poems by Emily Dickinson (Blackboard), Mark Twain’s The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn (1885), selections from Plessy v. Ferguson (1896), selections from W. E. B. Du Bois’ The Souls of Black Folk (1903) (Blackboard), Zora Neale Hurston’s “How It Feels to Be Colored Me” (1928) (Blackboard), selections from Charlotte Perkins Gilman’s The Yellow Wallpaper and Other Writings (1892; 2006), J. D. Salinger’s The Catcher in the Rye (1951), a selection from Scott McCloud’s Understanding Comics: The Invisible Art (1994), and Brian K. Vaughan & Fiona Staples’ Saga, volume 1 (2015).

Reynolds, G - 003

Aim: This course will introduce students to a wide and interesting range of key American works from the past 130 years. The aim is to give students a sense of the diversity and imaginative range of US literature.

Teaching Method: Small group discussion, class discussion, mini-lectures, and occasional use of film and TV resources.

Requirements: Students will keep a journal based on their reading and classwork, and there will be two research papers based on works studied.

Tentative Reading List: key works from the late nineteenth-century (Realism and Regionalism); from the Modernist era; the Harlem Renaissance; and from post-war and post-modern writing.

In this course, we’ll explore intersections between rhetorical theory and contemporary society—examining how we (and others) use language and images to engage in current conversations about such topics as what is ethical (and why?), what is good (and why?), what is cool (and why?). In short, we’ll examine how language, images, and media shape our engagement with the world around us. We’ll begin by framing our own working definition(s) of rhetoric, drawing on both classical and contemporary rhetorical theory. We’ll utilize and continue to develop our understanding of rhetoric(s) throughout the semester, as we attend to contemporary arguments made on social media, on television screens, on radio, in advertising, and other forms.

Teaching method: Readings due for each class period; class discussions about the rhetorical practices at work in the texts we are engaging; informal and formal writing projects. Attendance is crucial.

Major course assignments and reading list are still under development. Please contact Prof. Debbie Minter (dminter1@unl.edu) if you have questions or need additional information.

Wisnicki, A – 001- “Living in the Shadow of the Internet”

Over the last few decades a few mega-companies – Amazon, Facebook, Google, Apple, and Microsoft – have gained unprecedented levels of global power, while complicating the ideas of privacy and individual human agency.

Fitibits, mobile phones, computers, databases, surveillance cameras, drones, and satellites now track every part of our lives. We broadcast ourselves through Instagram, YouTube, and TikTok; manage our friends on Facebook; use Signal, WhatsApp, Twitter, and Snapchat to communicate. We search the world via Google, while Amazon Prime delivers whatever we need to our doorstep. We talk to Siri and Alexa, ask Tinder and Bumble to create our love lives, then turn to "the dark web" to fulfill our most extreme desires.

What does it mean to be alive today – at this unique historical moment when hidden, proprietary algorithms group us together, separate us, and predict every aspect of our behavior? Do surveillance, disinformation, social media, and the Internet of Things really control our knowledge, passions, and political freedoms? How does the internet – in ways overt and covert – determine ideas of gender, race, sexuality, nation, and numerous related topics? Is there anything left of "being human"? This course will address such questions by interrogating the technologies and practices of the companies that shape the modern world.

We will inform our work through assigned readings, vigorous debate, critical reflection, oral presentations, and formal writing; students will read fiction plus articles from The New York Times, Wired, BuzzFeed, and elsewhere on the web.

ENGL 278 - DIGITAL HUMANITIES: HACKING LITERATURE

This course will introduce students to basic digital tools that can be used to preserve, analyze, and reinterpret the human record. Put another way, this course will explore digital ways of “doing the humanities” (literature, history, philosophy, and the like). But the digital, as perhaps we all experience when we use social media or contemplate public politics or read about Gamergate, isn’t all fun and games, all memes and cute kitties. Through readings, discussions, and surveys of projects and websites, we will get a sense of the overall field of Digital Humanities, but we will also explore the persistent tensions between the digital and the human, technology and freedom, the excitement of innovation and the ethical failures that so often come with it. The main portion of the course, however, will be spent building skills and then creating a Digital Humanities project of your own. No special technical expertise is required; we’ll learn everything we need to know as we go along. We’ll watch a movie (The Matrix), read a novel (Neuromancer), and have guest lecturers from a range of professional careers visit us to talk about their projects and experience.

ENGL 302A - POETS SINCE 1945

AIM: This course will be a broad survey of American poetry since 1945. We will explore the various “schools”/movements of poetry (The Beats, Black Arts, Confessional, etc.) that developed post WWII as well as the historical contexts in which they developed.

TEACHING METHODS: This will be primarily a discussion-based class, with some brief lectures to put the writers and their work into perspective.

REQUIREMENTS: Close reading and analysis of a variety of poems, active participation in class discussion and small group work, several short papers, and a final wrap-up project. Possibly some quizzes.
READING LIST: Contemporary American Poetry, Poulin and Waters (ed), plus two-three recent individual collections of poems to be decided.

In this class, we will read novels by 20th- and 21st-century American women who imaginatively reconstruct the lives of girls and women in the 19th-century U.S. History has been (and by some is still thought to be) the record of the public actions of great men, spurring women authors to take up historical fiction to represent the past as experienced by women and girls. To give some coherence to our reading, most of the novels we will read engage one (or both) of two interrelated issues in the 19th-century U.S., namely slavery and its abolition and the westward expansion of the U.S. across the continent. In addition to immersing ourselves in the richly imagined worlds of these novels (and, I hope, finding enjoyment and pleasure in such immersion), we will consider ethical issues raised by historical fiction as a genre (type or kind) of literature. Many of these novelists have chosen places and characters intimately related to their own experiences and family history. Do writers have a special claim to authenticity or legitimacy if the world they reconstruct is inhabited by people like themselves (say, a Native American writer writing about Native American characters), or do authors have complete liberty to imagine the lives and motivations of all kinds of people? Likewise, although women and girls are central to many of these novels, sometimes these woman-authored novels represent the consciousness and perceptions of male characters. Historical novelists are not, strictly speaking, writing history, but do authors of historical fiction have a special obligation to be “accurate” in their depiction of the past? Or is the pursuit of the truth about the past distinct from judgments about accuracy? In addition to considering the past represented in the novels, we will pay some attention to the 20th- and 21st-century contexts in which the authors wrote their novels, and we will engage a variety of secondary materials.

Teaching Method: Brief lectures, whole-class discussion, and small group work.

Requirements: Regular close reading papers (2-3 pp.), a critical article response (2-3 pp.), a research-based critical paper (8-10 pp.), a group presentation, regular attendance and informed participation.

This interdisciplinary course looks at the depiction of women in American popular culture, beginning with early cinema of the 1920s through the present day, using examples from music, theater, film, television, fashion, and journalism. Pop music figures studied will include Madonna, Lady Gaga, Nicki Minaj, Rihanna, Katy Perry, and Beyoncé. We will also look at Oprah Winfrey, Sex and the City, Lena Dunham's Girls, Project Runway, America's Next Top Model, and more, as well as the depiction of women in fashion magazines and in online games. Readings in performance studies, film theory, fashion history, psychology, and women's studies.

Aim: This class operates on the belief that, in our age, the most important task of literature is to redirect the human imagination to a full consideration of its place in an increasingly threatened and degraded natural world. By examining a variety of texts--fiction, poetry, and nofiction--this class hopes to further that consideration. While emphasizing the human relationship to nature, many works also address issues of society, from racial politics to farm policy. We will read the work of a number of key writers, ranging widely from the very local to the planetary. This course will help students understand how the imaginative dimension of literature can inform our understanding of nature and environmental problems.

Teaching Method:

Reading and in-class discussion of assigned material. Occasional lectures. Use of internet and AV resources as relevant. Several local field trips.

Requirements: 1) Consistent engaged attendance and participation, 2) reading-response journals, 3) field trip reports 4) research paper.

Tentative Reading List:

Tallgrass Prairie Reader, ed. John Price

This Blessed Land: A Year in the Life of an American Farm, Ted Genoways

Ecopoetry Anthology, ed. Ann Fisher-Worth and Laura-Grey Street

The Water Knife, Paulo Bacigalupi

Trace, Lauret Savoy

The Uninhabitable Earth: Life After Climate Change David Wallace-Wells

This course will examine representative authors from the end of the eighteenth century to the beginning of the twentieth, paying attention to the development of reading and the rise of the publication industry in the United States, especially how race and gender influenced publishing and authorship. While reading authors such as Washington Irving, Frederick Douglass, Harriet Beecher Stowe, Fanny Fern, Harriet Jacobs, Mark Twain, Emily Dickinson, Walt Whitman, Ida B. Wells, and Charles Chesnutt, we will examine how they responded to the complicated, burgeoning American literary market and the sociopolitical issues it shaped and that shaped it.

AIM: This course, which looks deeply at important twentieth-century novelist and UNL alumna Willa Cather, will explore her in the context of the “world” of her readers. We will connect her diverse works to issues that are relevant to our world today and to us, her contemporary readers: immigration, women’s lives and roles in society (including the #MeToo movement), cultural pluralism, materialism, sexual and gender identity, the transformation of the environment, contested histories, and so much more. Additionally, we will consider her historical readers and explore how she may have been understood by them. The assignments will be designed to help students explore connections between Cather’s works and the concerns of her everyday readers.

Throughout the semester, in addition to reading Cather’s fiction and works by others that help us better understand contemporary issues, we will take advantage of UNL’s rich Cather collections and ongoing research projects. Our campus is home to one of the largest Cather archival collections anywhere, and UNL faculty and students are currently preparing the digital, scholarly edition The Complete Letters of Willa Cather, which has begun publication on the Willa Cather Archive (cather.unl.edu). Students in the class will have a distinctive opportunity to use materials and speak with people at the forefront of scholarship on Cather and her world.

TEACHING METHOD: Brief lecture, extensive discussion, in-class group work, presentations by students, probable field trips to University Archives & Special Collections, the National Willa Cather Center in Red Cloud, NE, and other relevant locales.

REQUIREMENTS: A healthy amount of reading, both fiction and criticism; active participation in class discussion; class presentation; creative and short writing projects that explore connections between Cather’s works and the lives of her readers.

TENTATIVE READING LIST: In addition to selected short pieces (available online), the reading list tentatively includes six Cather novels: My Ántonia, One of Ours, A Lost Lady, The Professor’s House, Death Comes for the Archbishop, and Lucy Gayheart.

AIM: This course is a survey of Native American literary women, a study and appreciation of their works from the turn of the twentieth century to the present day. Not only will the class consider a diversity of genres (including folklore, poetry, creative nonfiction, short stories, and the novel), but a variety of political stances will be examined—as Native women have written back against the "Master's house"—including Native traditionalism, feminism, and ecofeminism. Even more than male Native writers, these women have struggled with the question, how can one "imagine a new language when the language of the enemy" seems to have inevitably rendered the indigenous female Other culturally inarticulate? At last, I hope these works will demonstrate that such a "new language" is being powerfully articulated in contemporary Native American women literature(s).

TEACHING METHOD: Discussion, with some lecture and group work.

REQUIREMENTS: Attendance & oral participation; informal written responses to the readings; and two formal research papers.

Aim: This section of Writing: Uses of Literacy will be a writing centered course focused on the cultural construction of literacy. We will examine some of the current scholarship on literacy in the country, especially in the great plains; interview some community members about their literacy experience; explore what migration/immigration have to do with literacy, as a special focus; and design our own literacy action/research project.

Teaching Method: You can expect 1) to respond to reading/video material each week; 2) share drafts of thinking pieces (1000-1500 words) with a small group of others each week; 3) develop 3 extended pieces of writing in the course of the semester.
Requirements: Active, engaged discussion; collaborative and individual writing projects. Expect a 1000-word writing each week. I’m planning three units at present: Understanding Literacy; Migration/Immigration as a Literacy Topic; Extended Literacy Projects. Each unit will be about 5 weeks long, and require weekly writing & a culminating project.

Tentative Reading List: Very subject to change, but readings may include Deborah Brandt, “Sponsors of Literacy” and excerpts from The Rise of Writing; the Define American and Center for Immigration Studies websites; National Writing Project, Writing For a Change; web and print materials on local literacy/immigration agencies.

This course introduces students to the world of book publishing, which includes writing, editing, compiling, designing, producing, promoting, marketing, and more. Throughout the semester, representative experts in these aspects of publication will visit our class to explain the various kinds of publishing work from the perspective of the practitioners. Moreover, interacting with insiders who have made their careers in the field of publishing may provide future internship opportunities and potential and entry-level positions. In short, this practical course helps students discover whether a career in publishing is a good fit.

ENGL355 is primarily a team-based, hands-on course, in which groups of 5-6 students apply the advice gleaned from the visiting experts by taking two creative projects through the publishing process, including printing and marketing. The projects are a thematic anthology and a literary magazine/journal.

Peer review and collaboration is an integral component of the course; teams meet weekly both during and outside of our regularly scheduled class time. I hope you have had a chance to take a look at the publications produced by the previous two classes of Rilett’s ENGL355; they are incredibly creative and professional publications. Success in this course will be tangible—students produce books they can proudly show their family, friends, and future employers.

What do you need for this course? Students will need to bring their laptop computers to this class in order to facilitate project management and interactive file sharing. There are only 2 required books for this course: The Publishing Business: From P-books to E-books by Kelvin Smith (2012) and The Subversive Copy Editor by Carol Fisher Saller (2nd ed, 2016). In addition to these inexpensive texts, students in this course will pay for (and keep) their team’s printed publications. To this end, a non-refundable bookmaking charge of $35 will be collected from each student at the beginning of the semester.

ENGL355 has no prerequisites, however, junior or senior standing is strongly recommended.

Aim: This course is an introduction to medieval literature in Britain, but it will focus primarily on literature from the Middle English period, with an emphasis on Chaucer, chivalric romance, religion visions, and medieval drama. We will consider the way that literature in the medieval age reflects and reimagines society under feudalism, examining the way literature engages with accepted social model of the "three estates": those who work, those who pray, and those who fight. Students will learn how to read and pronounce Middle English and understand the development of the English language as a marker of the shifts in the social and cultural identity of Britons. Readings will engage power, gender, global interactions, religion and tradition (including fairy traditions and pagan ideas as well as conventional Catholicism of the time), classical influences, and economic disparity. The class will focus on literary texts, but also will include some historical and non-fiction readings.

Teaching Method: Discussion and Lecture

Requirements: Short and Long papers, exam, class participation, quizzes, translations

The nineteenth century, particularly the last decades of the Victorian era, witnessed a considerable expansion of the British Empire. The extent of the Empire quadrupled between 1860 and 1900 and came to encompass one-quarter of the Earth’s surface. This development accelerated British colonization of foreign lands and led to unprecedented levels of contact between the British and diverse people around the world. Intercultural encounters entailed uneven power dynamics; produced degrading representations of others; and often led to violence, exploitation, or other forms of eventual, British-led oppression.

This course will engage this historical record of the British Empire by introducing students to a variety of relevant voices and images from fiction, non-fiction, and the Victorian periodical press. Locations of interest will include Africa, Asia, Australia, the Arctic, and the Caribbean. Thanks to the work of modern writers and scholars, we now have better access to a multicultural range of perspectives on the imperial project (not just the British perspective). As a result, a key goal of the course will be to help students develop a nuanced, many-sided understanding of the British Empire as a historical phenomenon and as a unique moment of intercultural contact around the world.

We will inform our work through assigned readings, vigorous debate, critical reflection, oral presentations, formal writing, and various digital means.

Description:

This course explores theoretical and practical questions that surround teaching and learning in the writing center, primarily within a one-to-one context. We will investigate the growing field of writing center scholarship and examine how various theories and pedagogical commitments inform and shape the practice of writing center consulting. This course also involves a substantial research component, inviting you to explore some aspect of UNL writing culture and produce original scholarship. You will have the opportunity to observe consultations in the Writing Center, reflect on your own and others’ writing processes and experiences, explore the theoretical foundations of writing center work, and build your “grab bag” of one-with-one consulting strategies. Completing this course makes you eligible for (but does not guarantee) a position as a consultant in the UNL Writing Center.

Teaching

This is a discussion-based course that will include both small-group and whole-class discussions, workshop activities, and presentations.

Requirements
Requirements will include blog posts, shorter essays, and a longer research paper. Active participation is vital.

Tentative Reading

Texts may include The St. Martin’s Sourcebook for Writing Tutors, The Everyday Writing Center, Facing the Center, and others.

Environments of Renaissance Drama

This course focuses on British drama in the 16th and 17th centuries, including the work of prominent writers like Shakespeare, Middleton, Jonson, Kyd, and Dekker. Primary readings will come from different genres and styles, and we will examine connections between writers and theaters as we flesh out the theatrical environment of early modern London. However, secondary readings and critical attention will think about "environment" in several different ways, bringing work from ecocritics into the discussion of these plays to think about how topics like urban pollution and congestion, romanticizing of the "green world," the problems of agriculture and challenges over property rights and food access, water use and access, the depiction of animals, and others may be a part of our analytical and critical writing about drama. We will also reflect on performance practices and spaces, across time, to consider how playing environments can focus audience attention and shape interpretation. Critical works from Sharon O’Dair, Simon Estok, Bruce Boehrer, and others are typical of our secondary focus.

Teaching Method: Seminar

Requirements: Seminar Paper, annotated bibliography, presentation, summaries of critical secondary readings, some short writing.

Aim: Women directors have made considerable contributions to the art of filmmaking in all periods of cinema history, especially in the early days of film when there were many, many female directors. The history of women in early cinema has been neglected until fairly recently. We study the history of women film directors from the silent era to the present. One of the most interesting aspects of the class is discovering how film history in being actively rewritten to include the work of women and minority film directors.

This is an exciting class in which we study the history of women as film directors and utilize feminist approaches to their work. The range of directors we study is international and diverse including directors such as Alice Guy Blaché, Dorothy Arzner, Lois Weber, Maya Deren, Ida Lupino, Claire Denis, Lucrecia Martel, Agnes Varda, Ava DuVernay, Dee Rees, Jennifer Kent and many others. The course covers an international spectrum of women filmmakers; therefore we discuss nationality, race, class, sexuality, especially as these issues relate to the revision of film history and film reception. This is an exciting and unique class that covers rare films by neglected and forgotten women in film history, as well as the films of celebrated and contemporary women directors.

Teaching Method: Classes typically include a brief opening lecture, a film screening (with running analytical commentary during the film), and a class discussion after the film. We also discuss the reading materials after we view the film. We do a significant amount of reading and writing about women in film history, analysis of films, biographical material, and interviews with women directors. Developing analytical writing skills as a writer and class participant is central.

Requirements: Three research papers, weekly reading assignments, and class discussion. Students will study many different types of films directed by women, from early silent films to documentaries, and from art-house films to mainstream cinema.

Tentative Reading List: Anthony Slide, The Silent Feminists; and Karen Ward Mahar, Women Filmmakers in Early Hollywood. Additional online weekly readings, including interviews, feminist theory, film analysis, etc.

PREQ: Permission.

I am persuaded that most great fiction are possible through the development of what some critics like Hart Crane called “the logic of metaphor.” This happens when a writer centers a story around a philosophical idea, and that idea becomes the locus on which the story is created. There have been countless such works in the history of fiction writing as well as practitioners such as Ben Okri, Ruth Ozeki, Arundhati Roy, amongst others. We will look at a range of these works, and attempt to create our own fiction. We will look at how, for instance, we can create a story based on Emmanuel Levin’s theory of the face. What might that story look like? And what can we gather from there. The course will consist of close-reading of texts, theoretical considerations, and creative writing.

AIM:

This semester we will examine women’s rhetorical practices and their relationship to the 2000-year tradition of rhetoric, analyzing how women’s contributions have subverted and transformed traditional assumptions about rhetorical theory and practice, as well as about womanhood and feminism. We will focus on some central questions:

- How do women’s contributions work within and against masculine rhetorical traditions?
- How is “woman” conceptualized and expanded and transformed over time?
- What social, political and historical contexts inform women’s rhetorical contributions (or silence)? What has fostered women’s authority as speakers/writers?
- How have women sought to control and revise the construction and representation of their embodied identities: racial, ethnic, physical, sexual?
- How have women challenged assumptions about what “counts” as evidence in the production of knowledge?
- What are the implications of women’s rhetorical practices for teaching writing and rhetoric?
- What are our own rhetorical histories? How can we strengthen our speaking/writing/rhetorical practices in private and public spheres?

Teaching Method: Small-group discussions that stem from your weekly writing, full-class discussions, and student-led facilitations on your research projects. You’ll also be asked to share contemporary texts that connect to our weekly readings.

Requirements: Include weekly response writing; a rhetorical analysis of a local rhetorical event; and rhetorical action project (created for an audience outside the classroom); and a rhetorical contribution project that will go through a peer review and revision process.

Tentative Reading List: Ritchie and Ronald, Available Means: An Anthology of Women's Rhetoric(s) as well as a range of both primary and secondary texts in women’s rhetoric; these include texts on contemporary issues of transnational feminism, gender fluidity and digital media.

NOTE: Open only to English majors who have completed 24 credit hours of ENGL courses

Lynch, T – 002 - Cli-Fi: The Literature of Climate Change

Aim This course is designed to help students reflect upon their training as English majors and apply the reading, research, critical thinking, and writing skills they have developed in order to produce substantial writing projects suited to their individual areas of interest. The unifying topic for this class will be the literature of climate change, what has come to be known as cli-fi.

Climate change changes everything. How has it changed literature?

After a unit of reflection on each student's career as an English major, we will read, discuss, analyze, research, and write about several works of cli-fi by a range of authors: British and American, male and female, black and white. Students will then write a major research paper on any topic they wish, provided it can be related to climate change.

NOTE: This class is open to seniors only.

Teaching Class will be largely discussion based, with minimal lecturing.

Requirement Reflective essay, short papers, class presentations, one substantial research paper.

Tentative Reading

Adam Trexler, Anthropocene Fictions: The Novel in a Time of Climate Change

Ian McEwen, Solar

Magie Gee, The Flood

T. C. Boyle, A Friend of the Earth

Barbara Kingsolver, Flight Behavior

N. K. Jemisin, The Fifth Season

Agee, J - 101

This course represents the culminating experience of your undergraduate work in English and Creative Writing. Our approach will be multi-faceted: we will read, discuss and critique literary texts; we will explore the creative process in depth via texts written by writers about their experience, scholarly texts produced by scientists exploring the human brain, biology, etc., philosophical/psychological/anthropological texts, and interviews/discussions with contemporary, living writers and artists; we will investigate the publishing process and the construction of a life plan for pursuing your creative work. This course is appropriate for all students involved or interested in aspects of the creative process, including poetry, screenwriting, fiction, and so on.
You will be writing several short papers, reading and discussing several texts, and producing a final project.

If you are a fiction writer, it is suggested that you enroll in English 452, Advanced Workshop as a means of enhancing your creative writing experience.

What we write—and how we write it—reflects who we are, how and where we live, and what we believe. But it also reflects both our own individual social and cultural circumstances and the attitudes, assumptions, expectations and judgments of those who surround us. The stories we tell, and the way we tell them, reflect the moral and ethical assumptions, expectations, and practices that we have acquired in our individual journeys through life. Those stories are often sites—textual “places”—where we actively question or challenge these attitudes and beliefs within changing times and changing cultures. But all writing for public consumption—like all public speech—is inherently political, too, because it inevitably attempts to engage the minds of citizens in these same investigations of values. Any writer—any of us—therefore has an ethical responsibility for what she or he writes and may be held responsible for the consequences of that writing. Writing does not exist in a vacuum. For the writers we will study in this seminar—and they are really good writers!—the circumstances of gender exerted especially powerful formative influence, and so we will devote our attention and energy to considering the implications of those circumstances both for the authors and their contemporary audiences and for informed readers in our own supposedly more enlightened times.

We will approach the complicated interrelated subjects of gender, social justice, ethics and ethical behaviors (of all sorts) as we encounter them in a variety of literary texts from various times, places, and cultures. Our purposes will be both (1) to get a clearer sense of how individual women writers dealt with the challenges of gender and gendered attitudes in their own lives and works, and (2) to examine these interrelated issues are presented for our principled examination in texts that possess continuing literary, cultural, and/or aesthetic power and significance.

In this discussion-oriented and student-interest-driven seminar we’ll consider some particularly noteworthy women writers whose work challenged conventional gendered attitudes about subjects, themes, and “propriety” held among historically masculinist cultures. What sort of challenges did these authors face, and from whom or what? How did they handle those challenges? And why have their works become classics both of literature and of social activism? We’ll read and discuss fiction by authors like Jane Austen, Emily Bronte, Flannery O’Connor, and Eileen Change, poetry by Sappho, Gwendolyn Brooks and Maya Angelou, and drama by Iowa-born Susan Glaspell. Everyone will choose presentation topics and writing projects based on their individual interests that we will share and discuss as we think together about what these extraordinary writers still tell us about literature, social culture, and gender.

Requirements:

1. Thoughtful preparation, in advance, of assigned readings.
2. Regular participation in classroom discussions and both individual and group presentations.
3. Some brief and usually informal writing.
4. A longer formal seminar essay or project of your choice.
